OFFICIAL PUBLICATION OF COLVIG SILVER CAMPS

MARCH 2007

Reporting from the beautiful Red Creek Valley...and beyond!

From the Director's Chair...

Hello all you Colvig Silver Campers and welcome to spring in the Red Creek Valley. What could we possibly be doing with ourselves this time of the year? After all--we're a summer camp and it's not summer. Well, I'll tell you. After a short nap the day after staff leave, we begin preparing for the next summer. Yep!, in order for us to accomplish everything we hope to, each summer we begin again as soon as we end.

Right now, Eagle, our new Site Manager, is working on plans for the Homestead bathroom renovation, among many other things (see "Eagle's Corner" on page 6). I can't wait to see the half moon swinging doors to the toilets. Michael and Jack are busy finding the dedicated and inspired leaders that they do every year. They are also preparing for our American Camp Association (ACA) standards visit so that we are able to proudly say that our program and site meet the 229 national standards required by members of ACA. Lindsay has joined the never ending quest to achieve maximum efficiency and value to the CSC community in all aspects of office operation - PFA's, enrollment, letters home, website, etc. Tavia is working on the taxes and payroll process as well as developing a natural history corner in the Homestead Livery that we can use as a model for Saddle, Spruce and Outpost.

And me? I get to be involved in all of those things. I also get to explore a few new ideas of my own like "Hangout", an arrangement of hammocks in a special secret place. And most importantly, I get to hit the road and visit all of you on the slideshow tour and build our camp community. It is so great to see everyone and revisit all of the fun, adventure, and challenge of last summer through pictures and stories. We have had some great reunions this year (with a few left to go) and we thank everyone for coming and bringing new friends and family to CSC. Don't forget to keep telling your stories to friends, cousins, teammates, and even people you don't know so we can have an even bigger CSC community for 2007.

These are just a few of the things that keep us busy during the "off-season" - all of them part of the program development that we undergo each year. Where does the plan for that development come from? Well it starts with our mission - to facilitate the development of caring, thoughtful, and responsible human beings. It is then informed throughout the year by "industry" information that we gather through camping and outdoor publications and websites, and most significantly the three or four camp conferences we attend every year. These conferences are invaluable opportunities to have informal discussions with other camps and to attend formal sessions led by nationally recognized experts in such areas as site management, organizational effectiveness, youth development, societal trends, adventure programming, and technology in camping. We often find that we are on the right track or even leading the way in some areas. For example, when we hear that the average child in the U.S. spends an average of 25 minutes a week outside, something that Richard Louv calls "nature deficit disorder" in his book, "Last Child in the Woods". Or when David Elkind, Ph.D. explains, from his book "The Power of Play", that unstructured play time is critical in youth development because it is through making and breaking their own rules in the games that they create that children learn adapting and social skills, how to consider someone else's opinion, and mutual respect that leads to self respect. Or when the value we place on our 3:1 camper to staff ratio and their relationships is backed up by research presented by Dr. Jason Bocarro and Dr. Corliss Out-

Chatting With The Office Crew...

Laughing with LJ

A few years ago, I attended a workshop called "The Innovative Team" with team-building professional Tom Leahy. One concept that stuck with me was that of "shared mental models." Essentially, communication barriers arise when two people think they are discussing the same thing, but are thinking in different contexts. However, if they have a shared experience or vision to which they can both relate, they can communicate much more efficiently and have a more valued outcome.

So many CSC alumni have had these shared experiences over the years because Colvig Silver Camps has provided a forum for them to occur. Placing campers and staff in unique situations in the outdoors is empowering and memorable. Granted, specific events and people are different, but the larger traditions and philosophies that remain the same and forever will.

I was recently in contact with alumnus Lisa (McCreary) Coy and found that she and her husband, Andy Coy, discovered that they were both CSC alumni well after their time at camp (see "Six degrees of CSC on page 4). Lisa told me, "I think when you meet somebody who has done something that you loved doing, you automatically have a connection with them and usually end up liking them!" Having the shared experience of CSC between them brought them closer together and now they are considering Homestead for their oldest daughter, Bettie, so that she can share in their history as well.

I was also shocked by inter-generational shared experiences in February hanging out with alumnus Owen Perkins after the Lakewood, CO slideshow. He showed me a picture from his old 70's CSC scrapbook that I recognized in an instant—the campfire performance of "Little Cabin in the Woods", namely the infamous slow-motion verse. Anyone who has seen it will never forget it. It took me a minute to realize that though I recognized Clay in the picture, it was actually his father, Craig, whom I was seeing. I have shared the experience of viewing this performance with those who witnessed it, albeit with a different Colvig, more than thirty years ago.

Colvig Silver Camps continues to create connections across decades and state and international lines. Each day I spend involved with this community, I find more shared experiences and more value in spending my years working here in the valley. We can't wait for the arrival of new staff and campers this June and the creation of even more shared experiences in 2007.

Love, LJ

then I will be joining Jack and Clay on another leg of the slideshow tour to Denver and Aspen. Then we are off to the glitter and glamour of Las Vegas for a camp conference. Here we will learn valuable lessons and how to implement new ideas to help make this coming summer great.

With summer just around the proverbial corner, I begin to contemplate the last seven summers that I have spent in the RCV running through the woods and backpacking in the desert. I remember the campers who arrived on opening day full of energy and excitement. One of the great joys I have been able to experience in the last two years is hiring some of my former campers. I am proud and happy to share a summer of significance on staff with campers that I watched "grow up" through the years.

I will soon have the great pleasure of introducing a new batch of AC's to Hobart, the rigors of trash runs and Lodge cleaning, and the exhilaration of broomball. This year the crew will include a mix of former campers and people brand new to the CSC community. I look forward to showing them the ropes and of course learning from them as well. The group of young men and women who wash dishes and feed the pigs are the backbone of camp and they do it selflessly in order to provide an incredible experience to the campers, the reason we are all here in the first place.

Until I greet you at the dishroom door, I remain... Gus

Jack Once Caught a Phish This Big...

Greetings and salutations,

Snow makes my dog, Strider, slow down a bit. He tends to curl up in the corner and smell the furniture. It's an alright hobby for these shorter days, but I hope it doesn't become the pastime that defines him. If spring is for growth, summer for exploring, and autumn for the New York Football Giants, then winter is for reflecting. Maybe Strider isn't reflecting on the most pressing issues of the times, but lately I have been wrapping my thoughts around what it is we do here in the off-season. After we have put camp to sleep in the fall, we begin rousing it back awake by hiring staff, hitting the road on the slideshow, or creating new trips. In a way, the months from January to June are times to feel nostalgic for days we have not yet known. All the while, our gaze is fixed on the eastern skies, waiting for the sun to rise on a new summer.

Of course, this next summer is going to be, "the best summer ... ever!" The next summer is always the best. The next memory is the greatest and the next smile the biggest. That's why this place is so special; any given day you can take away a moment that you will hold on to for the rest of your life. Every summer is a chance to explore new vistas, friendships, and places within ourselves we never knew. T.S. Eliot once wrote that:

*We shall not cease from exploration
And the end of all our exploring
Will be to arrive where we started
And know the place for the first time.*

Maybe this is what it means to be at camp; to find new adventures and new friends around familiar corners. As the off-season rolls on, the thought of exploring new trails when the snow clears keeps me warm during these long nights and possibly makes Strider more excited about smelling the grasses and the trees instead of the couch and chairs. I hope that this summer you all come back to the valley to see it for the first time...again.

Do me a favor ... keep it real,

Jack

Michael's Musings

The days are getting longer and summer is right around the corner. It is only March but Jack and I played golf yesterday. The snow on the peaks surrounding Durango was a perfect backdrop as we worked on our backswings. Spring heralds the beginning of life. The Valley is hibernating but it will soon come alive with magic and laughter. With the end of winter comes the promise of a warm sun and the also the beginning of camp. I am waiting anxiously for June to come knocking on the door. When it does I shall answer enthusiastically and right away. Until

Hello CSC Alumni!

Here is your opportunity to scout out your old camp friends and bring back those camp memories from so long ago. Thanks to everyone who took the time to call, write, email, or visit us and tell us what and whom you recall from your favorite summers. It is heartwarming to read these messages and see what an impact CSC has made on so many lives. Inevitably, someone's information will be incorrect or outdated, or maybe we forgot to include you in this issue. But there is a simple solution for that: CALL US! EMAIL US! STOP BY! WRITE US A LETTER! VISIT THE ALUMNI SECTION OF OUR WEBSITE! Believe it or not, we do get a little lonely up at the compound during the winter and each time we hear from our camp friends our days are brightened!

The 70's

Letters to the Editor...

11.23.2006

Hello Colvig Family!!!

Happy Thanksgiving! Yesterday I got the latest issue of the CSC Dispatch, and it was so wonderful to read about what is going on at camp now, and see the alumni section and read about people I knew when I was there!

As with so many others, camp may be far away in geography and in terms of when I was last there, but it is always close to my heart and always in my mind. The lessons I learned, the friends I made, and the experiences I had still go unmatched. I am so thankful to CSC for all of this.

Here are a couple of ways that camp still plays out in my life, nearly 20 years after my "camper" experiences and nearly 15 years after my staff experiences.

I now run an after-school tutoring program for kids, K-12, who come to us for everything from help in subject areas to extra challenge and enrichment. Regardless of their academic reasons for coming to Score, one thing is true for every one of them. Among the most important skills we teach are problem-solving and working through challenge. I think through what these kids need, and where I learned these skills, and CSC is the answer to both questions. I draw on the strength gained from the challenge of keeping on, even when the mountain seemed impossible to climb, of thinking through how to work through an element on the ropes course when I am talking them through problem-solving, and I know the lessons were not just mine, but they now belong to the kids I teach too. So, thank you, once again, for providing the most wonderful environment for these lessons to take hold.

I wish you all a very happy holiday, and I will try to stay in touch better over time. While Richard and I won't be starting a family for a while, you can rest assured that when we have kids who are "camp-age" that they will be campers at CSC too!

I am so thankful to all of you for continuing such a fabulous tradition.

Love,

Katherine Thornburgh, cmp '80-'87, stf'92,'93

...I wrote to CSC a few months back and spoke about my feelings about those two summers. They were, without any doubt, the most important and meaningful experiences of my young adult life...more important than college, by far. They were a turning point for me in so many ways, and my life took its direction from those summers. John and I still have friends we are in touch with after 33 years. We have raised our two children to be devoted lovers of nature, beauty, gentleness, kindness, enthusiasm, passion, hard work, commitment, open minds, the importance of having fun, and adventure. All of these things, and many more were instilled, or strengthened, in us at camp...

In attendance were her brothers Tom Schoettler, cmp'82-'85,'87,'88, and Jim Schoettler, cmp'83-'89, as well as Paula Warzon, stf'84-'86, who was her Saddle and Pathfinding counselor and one of her maids of honor;

The Great Slideshow Adventure

Thanks to everyone who participated in another fantastic year of the CSC slideshow tour—all of you that hosted a show, let us stay in your homes, advertised a show, brought some friends, or showed up to see your faces on the big screen and get excited about another summer of significance. We couldn't do it without each and every one of you! We did some research on the road and found that in 2006, ninety percent of our campers were return campers or found out about us via word of mouth. That's incredible! Our CSC community seems to self-perpetuate as families invite other families that have the same vision and mission as we do. Keep sharing your knowledge of CSC with others whom you think would be interested and let us know if we should get in touch with people at your schools, athletic clubs, churches,

Houston, TX: Gena, Adam, Rachel, and Noah Miller; Travis, Korey, and Klaire Bednarz; Austin, TX: Rob, Cindy, and Trish Murphy; Michael, Tracy, Nick, and Joe Dileo; San Antonio, TX: Neel, Allison, Andrew, Shelby, and Anna Lane; Craig, Barbi, Jake, and Sara Witz; Durango, CO: Kirk Komick and the Rochester Hotel; Tucson, AZ: Steve, Volunteer Week!

People have been talking. They have been talking about the social event of the season. A time spent reuniting with old friends and meeting new ones in the beautiful spring setting of Colorado's Red Creek Valley. You guessed it, it's Volunteer Week 2007! Come and join us for a few great days working to get camp ready for all the 2007 campers.

Volunteer Week will begin on Friday, May 25th, with dinner at the Big House, and continue through June 2nd. Volunteers can choose to come for only the weekend or the entire week. Of course, you should be aware that the fun increases exponentially the longer you hang around.

2006 Saddle coordinator Sarah Townes and 2006 Saddle camper Aspen Clark stain the lower Lodge deck during last year's Volunteer Week

Throughout the week, housing, meals, and any tools will be provided. All you need to bring are some good ol' work clothes and an adventurous attitude. Volunteer work spans the full gamut from administrative work to intense wood-chipping. Tasks include (but are certainly not limited to) staining the Lodge deck, making camp trails passable with implements of destruction, de-shrubbing Main Lake, organizing the CSC Store, planting some flora around the Witch Doctor's, or anything else that needs to be done.

Volunteer Week is a fun time to reminisce with other camp families and give something back to the camp community. Please call us at the office if you would like to join us.

Eagle's Corner

What's keeping Eagle busy around camp this winter and spring besides feeding the horses? We have a bunch of fun projects going on that you may notice this summer:

-  Renovating Homestead bathrooms
-  Installing new Homestead bunks
-  Improving Main Lake
-  Finding new farm animals to keep Bellisima, Faline, and Do-si-do (the llamas) company
-  Putting finishing touches on the new garden
-  Reconstructing the irrigation ditches to water the horses from Red Creek
-  Beautifying camp in general.

COL: Colvig Outdoor Leadership

What happens after Pathfinding? How long do you have to wait to become a staff member? Well, these are good questions and we have one answer for you: COL. That's right, COL: our new Colvig Outdoor Leadership team. Much like a col in mountain lingo provides a high mountain transition between landscapes, so will the COL program provide the transition from youth camper to leader and staff member.

At CSC, we strive to develop programs designed to enhance self esteem, self reliance, personal responsibility, cooperation, leadership, trust, and a whole lot of fun. Out of our desire to fill the gap between Pathfinding and staff with something significant came the development of COL, a program that will be available to anyone who has completed a summer of Pathfinding and their junior or senior year of high school. It will be an opportunity to further explore the skills necessary to both in-camp counseling and expedition leadership in an organized and supportive environment. It is a stepping stone to becoming a staff member at Colvig Silver Camps.

The program will begin with an in-camp component during which the team will explore issues similar to those of the first few days of staff week. Then the team of ten (eight members and two leaders) will hit the trail, going places that CSC has never been before and participating in service projects along the way. Returning to camp, the team will spend the second half of the term living in their own cabins in Homestead and working directly with Homestead campers discovering, developing, and applying their leadership skills. On alternate days, the team will leave their mark at CSC in some significant way through participation in a service project around camp. Every evening after dinner the team will gather and debrief the day's activities, have some fun, and relax.

We are aiming high with this program and expect that it will be a very fun and valuable - and vigorous and demanding - experience for those in transition from camper to staff. We also have high expectations for those who participate. The program will be more curriculum-based than those for younger campers and throughout the program they will be evaluated by the leaders and the counselors with whom they work according to the same criteria with which we assess our summer staff.

There is more fun and adventure to be had at CSC if you take advantage of this new and exciting program that will expand your leadership development both in and out of camp and prepare you for leadership responsibilities throughout your life.

ley that shows that children who are able to develop relationships with caring adults are 47% less likely to begin using illegal drugs, have better school attendance and performance, and better peer and family relationships than those without those opportunities.

Sometimes we discover information that helps us understand our campers, staff, and parents better such as the generational characteristics we heard about from Neil Howe, who described the current generation of staff and campers as confident, ambitious, and collaborative and whose Baby Boomer parents are more protective and involved in their children's lives than the parents of Generation X. Sometimes we find new tools to use for staff such as tips on appropriate leadership approaches with different age groups, ways to make staff meetings more valuable and fun, and new ways to debrief daily experiences and relationships with campers to be able to provide more value to camper development and to the communication of that development to parents. And sometimes we are presented with information that broadens the scope of our approach to particular issue such as homesickness. Chris Thurber, Ph.D, a board certified clinical psychologist who works in camping and education, wrote a book and developed a DVD with ACA about homesickness and spoke to us about the "holy trinity of camping" - recreation, with a caring community, away from home - how important that time is in development, and the most effective ways for camps, staff, and parents to help campers through the anxiety of being away from home.

With all of that information in mind, we go through a constant evaluation of our previous summer, a process of taking parent, camper, and staff evaluations (thanks to everyone who sent notes, discussed things with us, or filled out our online survey - still available on the front page of our website) and sifting them through our operational filter to determine what we can improve on for the next year to achieve our shared goals. And then we get to work preparing for the next "Best Summer Ever!" We sincerely hope that you will be a part of it.

See you this summer!

Craig I. Colvig Scholarship Fund

This past summer, six deserving campers came to camp through the CIC fund and the John Austin Cheley Foundation with which it is associated. We expect the same this year and it is all possible through your generosity. The campers that have attended so far from this effort report very positive experiences and they have been wonderful additions to our summer family. We are so excited to be a part of a community willing to provide this opportunity to those who would not otherwise be able to afford it.

We invite you to become involved in this effort in recognition of how critical life-affirming and defining experiences are to a child's development. Your donation will be used directly towards a future "campership" at CSC. If you have questions regarding how you can help change a life by donating to the CIC fund, please contact the office.
